

Andrea Wilson, 30, will participate in the Los Angeles Marathon on Sunday to raise money for Blue Faery, the Adrienne Wilson Liver Cancer Association. Her younger sister, shown in this painting, died from the disease in October 2001.

JILL KARNICKI / THE LEADER

NEWS

Hoping to write her own Faery tale

When Andrea Wilson runs in Sunday's Los Angeles Marathon, she will have a fairy in her corner. Andrea will be running for Blue Faery, an association set up in memory of her younger sister, Adrienne.

SEE PAGE A10.

Running for a Blue Faery

Andrea Wilson hopes to raise $10,000 for research on liver disease, which claimed the life of her younger sister.

By Molly Shore
The Leader

NORTHWEST DISTRICT — Andrea Wilson believes in fairies, especially blue ones. When the Burbank resident participates in the Los Angeles Marathon on Sunday, she will be running for a special blue fairy — her younger sister, Adrienne Wilson, who died Oct. 9, 2001, of a rare liver cancer.

Wilson created Blue Faery, the Adrienne Wilson Liver Cancer Assn., to raise money to find a cure for the disease — hepatocellular carcinoma — that claimed Adrienne's life. It is the nation's first nonprofit organization dedicated to finding a cure for liver cancer.

"If she were alive, she would be out there cheering me on, but saying that it was crazy."

Andrea Wilson

Adrienne's form of cancer generally begins as Hepatitis B and C, which usually create tumors in the liver and lungs. Wilson said that Adrienne's doctors believed she contracted Hepatitis B as a fetus in her mother's womb, because their mother had a chronic form of the disease.

Wilson, 30, president of Blue Faery, hopes her marathon run will help raise $10,000 by April 8, which would have been Adrienne's 17th birthday. "If she were alive, she would be out there cheering me on, but saying that it was crazy," Wilson said. "She hated to run, absolutely hated it, but she loved to dance."

During the marathon, Wilson will be supported by her fiancé, John

Ceravolo, who is the association's vice president, as well as Blue Faery's board members and volunteers.

All of the money the association raises will be used for the prevention, treatment and cure of liver cancer through research, education and advocacy, Ceravolo said.

When she formed the association, Wilson asked friends for name suggestions and said most people came up with some version of "Blue Faery."

"Adrienne always loved fairies and she dyed her hair bright blue just weeks before starting high school," Wilson said. "Later, she purchased some blue butterfly wings that she wore on her back on special occasions."

When Adrienne started chemotherapy and lost her hair, Wilson said her sister asked for a bright blue wig so she could maintain her look.

"She became our blue fairy," Wilson said.